Consequences of breach of duties after the insured event

Duty to inform, presentation of supporting documents

Based on the contractual agreement with you we may ask you after occurrence of insured event to provide correct and timely information necessary for the determination of the insured event or the scope of performance obligation and enable us to properly examine our performance obligation insofar as you undertake everything reasonable for the clarification of facts. We can also request you to submit supporting documents in a timely manner as far as the same can be expected from you.

Freedom from performance

If you breach your duty to inform or submit supporting documents, you will lose your claim for insurance benefit. If it is a grossly negligent breach of these duties, we can reduce benefits in proportion to the severity of your fault which may also lead to a complete loss of your claim. There will be no reduction if you can prove that there has been no grossly negligent breach.

Despite of a breach of duty to inform and submit supporting documents we will remain obliged to perform insofar as you can prove that the intentional or grossly negligent breach of duty was neither the reason for the determination of the insured event nor the determination or scope of our obligation to perform.

If you breach maliciously the duty to inform or submit supporting documents, we will in any case be free from performance.

Note:

If the right to contractual performance is not yours but that of a third party, the latter is also obliged to provide information and supporting documents.

I declare that all statements I made are correct to best of my knowledge. I am solely responsible for the correctness even if another person took down the statements for me.
